E. SESSION SUMMARY:

-----Target structure was perceived as a tall building comprised of joined spirals as in a byzantine cathedral. It represented a mixture of cultures such as the concept of "Greek/Orthodox" that one might find in Constantinople. The structure was of a solid concrete construction predominantly grey/blue in color. Initially the structure appeared related associated with the concept of "institution of learning". As the doorways accessing the became more "eastern" in appearance, the purpose of the structure appeared to take on religious connotations. The concepts of rising towers spiralling into two or more columns with pinnacles were the basic concepts that drove the rest of the viewing.
